As of October 1, 2019, Brian Rosenbloom is named a shareholder of Rothwell Figg. Brian's promotion makes him the eighth shareholder, joining E. Anthony Figg, George Repper, Steven Lieberman, Joseph Hynds, Martin Zoltick, R. Danny Huntington, and Joo Mee Kim in the position.

"On behalf of the firm's shareholders, we congratulate Brian on this achievement. He is an outstanding attorney, and he has made substantial contributions to developing new firm business and has played a key role in important litigations," stated Antony, member and co-founder of the firm. "We look forward to his strategic input on firm matters and working closely with him to ensure continued success for Rothwell Figg."

Brian is recognized by Super Lawyers as a Washington DC Super Lawyer (2015-2019). He has been practicing in the field of intellectual property law for over 20 years and advises a wide range of clients, from Global Fortune 500 companies to independent inventors, entrepreneurs, and emerging businesses, in all aspects of patent and related intellectual property matters. His practice involves the preparation and prosecution of patent applications in a wide range of technologies and fields, with a concentration in the areas of wireless networking, telecommunications, machine learning, computer hardware, and computer software. Other substantial portions of Brian's practice include IP licensing and patent litigation matters in Federal Court and before the Patent Trial and Appeal Board.
